

ONLY A BAD COLD.

The advocates of the "grippe" theory are having a great deal of difficulty in finding facts to support them. They were very loud on the subject of epidemics not very long ago and were threatening all sorts of evils from the prevailing influenza, it such it be, but the longer it goes the more evident it becomes that "la grippe" is really only another name for a bad cold.

There is never a winter passes by without colds prevailing to a greater or less extent, and a variable winter, that is, one in which the changes of temperature are frequent, is especially prolific of colds. This has been the character of the present winter in the East and in many parts of Europe, and it would be very much stranger if colds did not prevail more than they do.

It is very evident that all the talk about death from the epidemic is purely sensational. No doubt it aggravates some kinds of diseases and hastens their ravages, but it is not the proximate cause of death, as all the records show. It does not need a college of physicians to tell that to one who has consumption the taking of a severe cold may prove fatal; and in every instance thus far in which death has been attributed to influenza the fact is that it has been complicated with some other disease.

A severe cold is enough of an affliction without making it any worse by giving it a new name and aggravating its effects. One with a bad cold does not generally receive much sympathy, and it may be that the sufferer thinks he will receive more if the disease is called influenza or "la grippe," but whatever it may be called it is nothing more or less than a bad cold, which is extremely annoying, but in itself not dangerous.

The Beautiful Snow.

The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow,
Up to your knees wherever you may go.
Will it never quit? Will it never thaw,
This is the worst we ever saw.

The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow,
It falls on houses and lays them low,
It stops the trains, delays the mails,
And takes the wind out of the reporters' sail.

The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow;
They say it's pretty, but it isn't so;
It is worse than flies, and it brings la grippe,
And it makes mankind fall down ka-dip.

The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow;
We used to like it, but now it don't go.

The consummate stuff has been here too long,
But I can't knock it out with more of this song.

THE DUEL ON PROTECTION AND FREE TRADE
—A telephone message reached this office late yesterday that a terrific gale was raging at Lake Tahoe, and that all the steamers had been secured as tight as possible to prevent their destruction. The waves are dashing clear above the wharves, and the wind is howling over the mountains like mad. Many of the row boats and small craft will be entirely wrecked. The loss otherwise will be considerable.

The duel on Protection and Free Trade between Jim Blaine and Gladstone was a discussion that will be handed down to the people until the vital question is settled. The question in its entirety can be found in the North American Review, and should be read by everybody.

It looks as if the weather had let go to get a new hold, and something had gotten away.
